Swan Lake, Act II Synopsis

Scene 1: Prince Siegfried, heir to the kingdom, arrives at his birthday celebration where all the royal families and townspeople are celebrating. During the exquisite celebration, his mother gives him a crossbow as a gift, but then informs him that because of his age, his marriage will be quickly arranged. Upset with the realization of future responsibilities and of the inability to marry for love, he takes his crossbow into the forest at night with his hunting buddies.

Scene 2: Informing his friends that he wants to hunt alone, Siegfried finds himself in a peaceful spot by an enchanted lake where swans fly overhead. He aims his crossbow and readies himself for their landing by the lakeside. When one comes into view, however, he stops. Before him is a beautiful creature dressed in white feathers, more woman than swan. Enamored, the two dance and Siegfried learns that the swan maiden is Princess Odette. An evil sorcerer, Von Rothbart, captured her and used his magic to turn Odette into a swan by day and woman by night. A group of other swan maidens attend Odette at Swan Lake, which was formed by the tears of her parents when she was kidnapped by Von Rothbart. She tells him that the only way the spell could be broken is if a man, pure of heart, pledges his love to her. As Siegfried begins to confess his love to her, Von Rothbart appears. Siegfried threatens to kill him but Odette intercedes. If Von Rothbart dies before the spell is broken, it can never be undone. Von Rothbart commands the swan maidens to dance on the lake, and Siegfried is left alone on the shore of Swan Lake.
